

5 Things to do in Philadelphia with kids during Summer 2016

1. Spruce Street Harbor Park

pop-up park for relaxing with your family after a long day of sightseeing. You have the option of enjoying a private waterfront cabanas or enjoying time with the kids in the hammocks. The Park will be open until September 26, 2016.

2. Colonial Kids' Quest Puppet Show

combine learning with fun at this interactive puppet show where your kids will act as kid detectives and track down the missing Declaration of Independence. The show runs until July 23, 2016.

3. Wawa Welcome America

Perfect for Fourth of July getaway, there is nowhere better to celebrate United States independence than where it was all started. First of all, this isn't your usual celebration because it's a week long. The Wawa Welcome America is a huge block party and it's a great time to visit Philadelphia since there is free admission to selective museums, free concerts, and outdoor movies. Wawa Welcome America will be from June 27-July 4, 2016.

4. Once Upon A Nation Storytelling Benches

If your kids love story time, make sure to head to one of the 13 benches through Historic Philadelphia where professional storytellers share little-known truthful tales from the nation's past. Once Upon A Nation Storytelling Benches ends on September 5, 2016.

5. The Blue Cross RiverRink Summerfest

Enjoy this outdoor roller-skating rink, mini-golf course, and urban beach with umbrellas and misting stations to keep you cool.
